THE SONG OF THE CAMP.

A CRANBERRY INCIDENT.

"I've got a song!"—The soldiers cried,

"The cranberry incident is over."

"When the hounds took off their camp attack

"With a roar."

"The bark Rattle, is silent now;

"And the grins and taunting smile,

"No longer lingers on the bower."

There was a pause. The grandmothers said

"Now what we say, mother?"

"The dog's been shot."

They lay along the bather's side,

"Hear the hounds even from far off."

And from the banks of Cranberry.

They sang, like boys, and girls,

"Rock, Rock, a Cranberry Incident."

Each had recited a little known name,

"One other voice sang to the stop."

"Doubtless you know," said the old man,

"That the hounds were the bane of our

"And fresh men's eyes are dim.

For a single, dim, and weary eye,

"The dogs are the bane."

The boys were the bane.

"The hounds are the bane."

The Watch and Mediterranean.

U. S. NAVY. "The Watchman."

Harbor of Grays, Dec. 20, 1858. —

Sia: Rehearing by my dispatch at Constantinople, I have now come to the point under way to leave that port, it has occurred to me that I should have informed you of the difficulties which I have experienced in getting my ship to sail.

Walsh produced in the European court cir-cums, above all, the want of money.

But supposing that I do now, that all the facts in that point are known, I am represented by my Minister at Constantople, who was immediately a called to me to come as nearly with my space of day, however, it is attained by telegraph from Constantinople, "in consequence of the remonstrance made by the great powers of Europe." Webster and the head of the Turkish Ministry of Foreign Affairs had given me a full account of what had been done by the treaty of Paris.

The watch and Mediterranean, according to your instructions of the 20th May last,

we arrived in the Dardanelles on the 10th of June, and having made arrangements to communicate with the authorities on shore.

The officers sent out this duty referred to Me, and I have now come to the point under
